I say that with the true democrat there can be no such cry much of a capple. Everybody knew as my country before my party."

That was the attitude of the democrats in congress in 1898 - party before patriotism: "Jimham" Lewis is now the recognized spokesman for the administration in the senate. Does he still revolt at the cry of patriotism, and is he still putting his party above his country? Will the voters be fooled by the cry that none but democrats are patriotic enough to be trusted with the government of the country?
